

Getting Started: The Onboarding Process

Meridian's onboarding runs in five stages, from a prospective client's first call through their first structured progress review. Most clients move from the discovery call to their kickoff session in seven to ten days.

Stage One: Discovery Call

A free twenty-minute call with no obligation. The coach and the prospective client discuss what the client wants to work on, the coach explains the Meridian Method, and both sides confirm the fit is right before anything is booked.

Stage Two: Baseline Assessment

Within three days of the discovery call, the client completes the Meridian Baseline Assessment, scoring career, relationships, health, finances, and sense of purpose on a scale of one to ten. The results shape which coach the client is matched with next.

Stage Three: Coach Matching and Package Selection

Using the Baseline Assessment results and the goals discussed on the discovery call, the client is matched with one of Meridian's three coaches and selects a package: Foundations, Momentum, or Executive.

Stage Four: Kickoff Session

The client's first full fifty-minute session. The coach and client set specific, named outcomes for the engagement and agree on a session cadence the client can actually sustain, in line with the Meridian Method's fourth pillar.

Stage Five: First 30-Day Check-In

A structured review, thirty days after the kickoff session, comparing progress against the outcomes set at kickoff. The coach and client adjust the plan together if the original pace or goals no longer fit what the client has learned about themselves in the first month.
